

New Zealand Geographic Board Ngā Pou Taunaha o Aotearoa

The memorial markers of the landscape

The New Zealand Geographic Board is New Zealand's national place naming authority, responsible for official place names.

We run a public process to decide what places should be called recognising the relationship we have with the land and its connection with our identity.

The New Zealand Geographic Board:

- has a responsibility to safeguard the geographic naming traditions, culture and heritage brought to New Zealand by its various communities;
- ensures its geographic naming work contributes to a geographic information system that provides economic, cultural, and social value to all New Zealanders;
- is steward (kaitiaki) and custodian of New Zealand's official geographic names;
- is principal adviser to the New Zealand government on geographic names (official and unofficial) - especially to Toitū Te Whenua Land Information New Zealand, Te Arawhiti (the Office for Māori Crown Relations) and the Department of Conservation;
- consults with New Zealanders to take account of their views in its decision making;
- ensures its decision making and advisory capabilities are deployed where they can most benefit the longer term interests of New Zealand;
- ensures its decision making is independent and based on robust processes

Why are geographic names important to New Zealanders?

- There are long term benefits to the nation - practical, administrative, social, cultural and historical - including national or cultural identity
- A geographic name is a fundamental part of address, along with road name and property number. Therefore, unique and usable geographic names form a key purpose to locate people and property, contributing to efficient government administration and linking data for a wide range of public and private purposes

What is the standard proposal process?

Proposal received

When a new place name proposal is received, the Board Secretariat assesses it for completeness, before it will be processed. This includes ensuring that consultation with affected people, including the local community and iwi, has occurred. Without these minimum requirements, the Board will not have the necessary information to make a decision on the proposal.

2. Research and report by Secretariat

The Board Secretariat undertakes further research and communicates directly with groups such as local councils and local iwi (guided by Te Puni Kōkiri). A proposal report is prepared for the Board's consideration.

The Board considers proposal

The Board will consider the proposal at its next meeting and decide whether or not to support the proposal. If it does not support the proposal, the process ends.

Proposal publicly notified seeking submissions

If the Board supports the proposal it notifies it on the Toitū Te Whenua website, in newspapers and other publications, asking for supporting or objecting submissions from the public. Media releases, editorials and social media such as Facebook are other important ways of engaging with as many people as possible. For the Board to make an informed, robust and enduring decision on the proposal, it is critical that it understands the views of the local community, including iwi.

The Board considers submissions

Once the notification period closes, the Board reviews any submissions received.

The Board or Minister make final decision

If there are no submissions or only supporting submissions then the Board makes the final decision to make the proposed place name official. If the Board upholds submissions objecting to the name it can make the final decision. However, if it doesn't agree with objecting submissions, then the Minister for Land Information makes the final decision.

Why have official place names?

- To provide practical, unambiguous, fundamental and unique location identification and navigation for the physical landscape we live in
- To recognise heritage and culture to give a sense of place
- To provide a reliable and authoritative source for standardised, consistent and accurate names
- To demonstrate New Zealand's jurisdictional interests
- To provide a fundamental data theme for geospatial data layers
- To ensure consistency in the use of place names
- To identify where we are as we go about our everyday business - they are a component of our infrastructure, and most importantly they matter in emergency responses
- To ensure that important names are preserved and restored

Official place name gazetted

The Board publishes the final decision in the New Zealand Gazette as conclusive evidence of the official place name.

Gazetteer updated

The decision is also added to the Board's Gazetteer (gazetteer.linz.govt.nz) an online repository for all place names that includes additional contextual information, including position, extent and history/ origin/meaning.
